

Visual Source Binder

Each week find the work of two photographers or artists who interest you. Print at least one key image from each source. For each entry, write in (by hand) the artist, title and a brief response to the work. Both the personal response and the physical act of writing will help you remember the work better than if you were just to type it.

Keep all of these entries in a three ring binder. Refer to it often for inspiration. By the end of the year, you will have more than 60 entries and you will find that your knowledge and retention of photographic artists has grown tremendously.
